Residents' acknowledge that there is a need for more housing in Oxford. However, to build anything in the flood plain is irresponsible, particularly given the flooding of homes seen around the country this winter. The Climate Emergency indicates that extreme weather is more likely in the future. A large part of Park Farm field is on flood plain Zone 3, the riskiest part of the riverside on which to build. NMRA is totally opposed to the field should be used for housing.

The field is directly adjacent to an Oxford City Wildlife Site (OCWS) and part of New Marston Meadows which includes a Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI). The field is currently in green belt. The SSSI is recognised nationally and internationally as of importance for biodiversity. The site is in functional flood plain and it is also an important and unique landscape area within city boundaries.
