1 The Green Belt provides important breathing space for the urban residents of Oxford. To dismiss the space as not significant is to ignore the widespread use of the fields and pathways that make up that part of the Green Belt by local residents.

2 The potential damage to the Green & Blue Infrastructure of the city also runs counter to the council's stated plans of maintaining and improving these important links. There is a very well-used cycle and pedestrian path running right along the bottom of the field, one of the main green gateways into the city centre. Building 60 houses across the other side of it with no vehicular access at the moment will have a huge impact on its users and may have the perverse effect of reducing its popularity.

3 Most importantly of all, we must no longer build on floodplain. The climate crisis is not getting better; at present there is no concrete national or international action to tackle it. Flooding is only going to increase; you will be putting current (and future) residents lives at risk. Allowing this to be built on and leaving it up to a future flood risk assessment is just passing the buck.
